

This for matching words with real life example
"cafeteria" (match word to definition to example)

justify contrast

compare define

trace

evaluate illustrate classify

Write a meaning for the word. Include such features as category, function, size, shape, and texture.

Tell how two or more things are alike.

Give an orderly, step by step explanation of how something happened or happens from beginning to end.

Give the good and bad (positive and negative) points about a subject.

Tell how two or more things are different.

Draw a picture, graph, or diagram or write a detailed example.

Sort the information into categories, or tell in which category an item belongs.

Give information to support given actions or beliefs. Try to show that something is true or right.

A cafeteria is like a restaurant because they are both places for eating out.

A cafeteria is different from other types of restaurants because generally you take a tray down a line of food and pick out what you want rather than ordering off a menu.

We should go to a cafeteria tonight it will take too long to go to the grocery store and then cook the meal.

A cafeteria is a type of restaurant where people use tray to pick out food as they go down a line. There are usually several choices of meats, vegetables, salads, and desserts from which to choose.

First you pick up a tray, silverware and napkins. Then you start down the line, past the meats, vegetables, and desserts. Finally, you pay the cashier and find a table.

Cafeterias are good because they have many food choices. They also can be quicker because the food is already cooked. However, cafeterias sometimes are not good because the lines can be long and there are only two to three choices of each item, whereas a menu could have ten to twenty choices of foods to eat.

Cafeteria is a type of restaurant.

